

A guide to working with your local health care provider

If you're looking to support people in your area to improve their digital skills so they can take charge of their health, a great way to start is by working with your local GP, chemist or hospital.

Run sessions in your local GP surgery

If you're looking to set up new outreach sessions, why not think about working with your local GP surgery? You could set up a couple of computers, and show patients what they can find on NHS Choices - like ordering repeat prescriptions or rating their local surgery.

Put posters up in health settings

Your local chemist, surgery or hospital may be able to help promote the work you're doing in your centre by putting up posters. Why not chat to them?

Create referral relationships

GPs and chemists often provide people with advice on healthy eating and getting fit, and they know there's a wealth of information online. Why not ask them to tell patients about NHS Choices, and send them on to your centre if they want to find out more.